DOWNTOWN ANNAPOLIS

26 MARKET SPACE

The present building located at 26 Market Space, Annapolis, Maryland, is the last remaining part of the original three-story Wallace, Davidson, and Johnson Building, which was known as Factors Row. Constructed in 1771, it extended from Main Street to Cornhill Street at the head of the city dock. It was used as a warehouse by representatives of British merchants, called factors, who made arrangements to ship Colonial planters' produce to England and Scotland in exchange for British goods. In 1883, a fire destroyed all but the Cornhill Street end of Factors Row. The section at 26 Market Space was reconstructed between the remaining original side walls using brick salvaged from the fire. Two of the original 1771 hand-hewn beams are still visible inside the building between the first and second floors.

During its long history, the building has served various commercial purposes, including a hotel, grocery store, tailor shop/men's store and restaurant, with family living quarters and apartments on the upper floors. In 1909, the great-great uncle of the present owner purchased the property and it has remained in the family since that time.
