11 Fulton Street Grace Peixotto House

Constructed 1852;
Renovated and rehabilitated 1980s

In 1851, the entrepreneur Grace Peixotto purchased a lot on what was then called Beresford Street and built a brothel. After her death in 1879 or 1880, the property passed to Jacob S. Myers. Although Myers, a mariner and dealer in cigars in tobacco, is listed as the owner, various madams are noted as residents until the end of WW II. At this time, the property contained, in addition to the main building, a 2-story brick building and a 3-story brick building arranged around a courtyard and linked by piazzas. After the building was vacated in the postwar era, it was rented to navy petty officers and their families. These tenants petitioned the changing of the street name to Fulton to put an end to any ties to the former address. Subsequently, the building served as a furniture warehouse, a storage facility, a bar, and offices.
