DISTRICT PHASING

Domain South End is being completed in phases. Initially, South End's high-rise office buildings and residential towers are being dramatically grouped around a storied IBM research and development facility. This is creating a unique urban experience that reflects both the history and future of technological innovation.

Every aspect of Domain Tower 2's design supports the building's role as an iconic home to leading-edge businesses and its status as a new North Austin landmark. The lower 14 floors mix glass and concrete panels to establish the building's ground-level presence and create a decidedly urban massing for the surrounding streetscape. The upper levels — which are stepped back to allow for a large amenity terrace — get a strong sense of verticality from fins that rise along key building edges. These vertical fins turn and become canopies at the roofline, drawing attention to the top-level pedestrian terrace that serves as an intriguing and high-visibility halo for the building's dramatically detailed façade.

INTERIORS

Domain Tower 2's lobby blurs the line between inside and outside by using the same floor and ceiling finishes both within the lobby and in exterior spaces. The ceilings also use the same warm wood panels that serve as accents on the building's façade, helping to give the building a human scale and create a sense of welcome for tenants and visitors.

ACCESS

Domain Tower 2 gives tenants and guests multiple connections to northbound and southbound Burnet Road, as well as eastbound and westbound Braker Lane, giving the building some of The Domain's easiest access to and from nearby MoPac and Highway 183.

Designers reinforced the ground floor's indoor-outdoor concept by articulating the glass lobby façade. As the glass steps in and out, it brings the exterior gardens visually into the lobby.

AMENITIES

A place employees want to be

Domain South End is just far enough from The Domain's retail, restaurants, and entertainment to avoid the congestion and noise, while still being an easy stroll or ride from all The Domain has to offer. That means businesses in Domain South End benefit from the recruiting and retention-enhancing effects of The Domain's full range of highly sought-after amenities.

This desirability is enhanced by the presence of the district's own pocket park, food trailers, restaurants, and signature retail.

A location with the best of both worlds

Domain South End's location is unique in The Domain. It sits steps away from The Domain's best attractions — including the bustling Rock Rose dining and entertainment district — but the business-focused South End offers its own access points to Burnet Road and Braker Lane. This gives South End tenants and residents the option to limit their everyday interaction with The Domain's retail and dining traffic.
